We hope you're staying safe during these unprecedented times. CHPA's role is to advocate for our member companies. As an association, we are also gathering information on member companies who are willing to offer units at a reduced rate for priority healthcare workers and/or people in crisis. Or even if your company is willing to offer available units to help with the overall housing shortage today. We will use our resources and connections to get this information to state and city officials to show the industry's partnership and goodwill at this time of crisis. Please reply immediately by adding your company's available inventory to this survey.

Our COVID-19 resource page is updated continually with information your company may find helpful, including links to the Small Business Administration. Please check this source frequently as we add information daily.

The CHPA team is participating in several webinars/educational opportunities on how to best resource member companies. A few suggestions came up and I offer them here for your consideration:

- Connect with your area's Chamber of Commerce to add your company's voice to their advocacy efforts to get aid.
 - United States list of Chambers found here.
 - Canadian members, please check this site.

- Research your local, state and provincial Offices of Economic Development to connect to their advocacy efforts.
- Local universities and colleges: Housing is being closed down at universities and colleges. Reach out to their housing staff to offer your units to stranded students or student affairs staff that can't get home. CHPA's Director of Membership, Nick Estrada, came from higher education so he is promoting CHPA's member directory via social media for these types of opportunities.
- Add your voice to advocacy for the hospitality industry here.

If you have other ideas to share with CHPA colleagues, let me know and we'll get it out to the corporate housing community. Be well and take care!
